CLOSED DOOR SESSION WITH CIA HEAD

JOSEPH McCAFFERY: "A closed door session with the head of the CIA, John McCone today. McCone briefed the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Afterward, Chairman Fulbright said he saw no signs of another government upheaval in South Viet Nam. Here now is the Senator from Arkansas."

FILM CLIPS OF SENATOR FULBRIGHT AS HE SPOKE.

FULBRIGHT: ". . . Buddhists are very active, and they've inspired, as you know, riots, and so on. It's a very difficult situation, and he didn't say anything that would counteract that. I mean he simply, in a way substantiated what we've already read about, from the reporters who are on the scene."

QUESTION: "In view of the manifestation of the anti-American demonstrations and the rest of it, do you think that we should perhaps shift the emphasis of our policy, or even pull out?"

FULBRIGHT: "No, I have consistently supported the present effort. I don't think the so-called anti-Americanism, as yet, has reached any great extent. That's a symbol of the chaos that exists within the country, that is the objections that have arisen to the government itself."
